Burglars Caught in the Act of Robbing Fred Otto's Saloon.

"Home Talent" in Custody on a Very Serious Charge.

An attempt was made last night to burglarize Mr. Frederick Otto's saloon adjoining the Central Hotel on Market street, but the gang engaged in the plot came to grief, and one of them is now in custody.

Shortly after 12 o'clock Messrs. Henry Otto, John Fisher, George Altmeyer and John Mangan, who had been attending a dance at Knights of Labor Hall, were on their way home and stopped at the saloon to get a glass of beer. When the door was opened and the gas lighted, the party were somewhat surprised to find some memorandum and account books on the counter. The remark was made that burglars had been at work, but Mr. Otto thought the books had been left out by mistake by his brother. The next instant another discovery was made. A "jimmy" and other tools were found. Burglars had been there sure enough. The cash-drawer was opened and the papers scattered about on the floor. Just then Mr. Otto and his friends heard a noise in the back room and still another discovery was made. The burglars had not only been there but they were still there. They had been caught in the very act. Parties were at once stationed at each of the doors, and a hunt instituted. Suddenly one of the gang made a break for a stairway at one side. Passing through Hendrixson's paint shop, the fellow jumped out of the second-story rear window and escaped by the alley behind the Central Hotel. In leaving the saloon the fellow ran across Duke Hill, who had come in and was stationed on the stairway. The desperate burglar had a pistol in his hand, and Duke very considerably stood aside.

The other burglar was shortly afterwards found and was captured by Mr. Otto and party. He proved to be Charley Willett, a young carpenter. Willett claimed that he had come in the saloon after Otto and party had entered. He was placed under arrest by Marshal Heflin, and is in custody to answer the charge. His home is in the Fifth ward, and he has heretofore borne a good reputation. No one suspected that he had gone wrong. The name of his partner, it is said, is known. He left town after escaping arrest, and is still at large.

Investigation this morning disclosed the fact that the entrance was effected from the rear. The burglars climbed upon an out house, thence through a second-story window into Hendrixson's paint-shop. At the foot of the stairway leading to this shop is a side door to the saloon. A hole was bored through this door, enabling the parties to raise the latch on the inside. In the first attempt to bore this hole the latch was struck. The door is only a few feet from the pavement, and the parties were rather bold in their work.

Only $5.00 or $6.00 was in the cash drawer. This had been taken out and was found in the rear room in a cigar-box where it had been taken by the parties when they were interrupted in the work.

The Heatt Mystery.

The mystery surrounding the disappearance of young Heatt at Ripley on the 21st of last month is still unsolved, and there is still a belief that he met with foul play.

On the night after Heatt disappeared a stable was burned in Ripley. The fire, it is thought, was the work of an incendiary. Some now believe that Heatt was murdered and robbed, and his body dragged into the stable and the building fired in order to destroy all traces of the crime.

REVIVING OLD TROUBLES.

The Case of the Germantown Turnpike Company Against the New Gas Company Taken to Court of Appeals.

The fight against the Citizen's Gas Light Company has been revived during the past week. The new company has had to contend with bitter opposition from its very inception from the old company and the old company's friends and backers, but it has got the best of the fight at every stage of the game. At present, it has the upper hand in the struggle, but there are, it is rumored, many schemes concocted and being concocted by its enemies to harass and drive it to the wall. It remains to be seen whether these alleged schemes shall prove successful.

The case of the Maysville and Germantown Turnpike Company against the Citizen's Gas Light Company was decided by Judge Cole at the last January term of the Mason Circuit Court. The action was brought several months previous to that time—sometime along in the year 1886. The turnpike company sought to enjoin the gas company from laying mains along and under that part of the pike within the city limits—from Lower street to the West End. A temporary injunction was granted, but at the term of court which soon followed the injunction was dissolved. An appeal was at once taken to the court at Frankfort, and the injunction was reinstated. The case ran along and at the last January term it came up for trial. Evidence was introduced, arguments were made and the suit was heard on its merits. The result is known. Judge Cole refused to grant the turnpike company's prayer, and an order was made dissolving the injunction. This decision was rendered on the 4th of last February. Since then the turnpike company has granted the city control of that part of the road in dispute, and it has been the general opinion that the trouble over the matter was at an end. This, however, seems a mistake. Although nearly a year has passed since the decision application, was made only a few days ago to Circuit Clerk Ben D. Parry for a transcript of the record of the case. The application was made by the attorneys of the turnpike company. They were in a big hurry, it is said, and wanted the record fixed up as soon as possible. By extra work the transcript was completed by Mr. Parry in time to be forwarded to Frankfort by the early train last Monday. It remains to be seen what the outcome of the new move will be. Members of the "n. g." allege that the "o. g." folks are at the bottom of the scheme, whatever it is; they charge, in fact, that the turnpike people would have let the matter rest, had they not been importuned by the gas company.

The "n. g." fellows are confident there's a "nigga in de wood-pile," and there is likely to be some fun in the near future. Further developments will now be anxiously awaited.
